Saudi Arabia ignores the objective, documentary evidence undermining the findings of Magistrate Judge Sarah Netburn and, instead, repeats the erroneous findings verbatim. ECF Nos. 8751 (“Opp’n”), 8544 (“Ord.”). Saudi Arabia proposed those very findings to the court in its post-hearing submission. Saudi Arabia also avoids addressing the plain textual analysis of Rule 37(b), which requires “party” misconduct as the foundation of any sanctions, and the Second Circuit’s holding in Apex Oil Co., which confirms that a law firm is not a Rule 37 “party.” As demonstrated in Kreindler & Kreindler LLP (“K&K”)’s objections, the full record shows that

- a longtime, trusted consultant secretly leaked a deposition transcript on his own initiative to “forewarn[]” the public after learning disturbing information about the deponent;
- the consultant took substantial steps to prevent K&K from discovering the source of the leak and lied to K&K for over two months to hide his misconduct;
- K&K’s attorneys were unaware of the consultant’s betrayal and, due to the steps taken by the consultant, could not have learned of it until the day that he confessed; and
- K&K reported the facts to the Court the same day that it learned the truth.

ECF No. 8681 (“Obj.”). By adopting Saudi Arabia’s proposed findings, the Magistrate Judge overlooked documents that disprove the court’s key “fact” findings, analyzed the record under the wrong evidentiary standard, and sanctioned K&K without authority under Rule 37(b).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The parties agree that, under Rule 72(a), this Court must modify or set aside an order that is “contrary to law” or “clearly erroneous.” See Opp’n 19; Obj. 15. On the law, Saudi Arabia incorrectly suggests (at 19) that this Court should defer to the Magistrate Judge’s views, even though it is settled that an “interpretation of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure” is reviewed de novo. Obj. 15 (quoting Williams v. Beemiller, Inc., 527 F.3d 259, 264 (2d Cir. 2008)).¹ On the facts, Saudi Arabia argues (at 19) for heightened deference to the Magistrate Judge’s findings because they were “at least partially based on a credibility determination” and because the Magistrate Judge has previously been “deeply involved in discovery matters in the case for years.” As detailed below, however, Saudi Arabia misrepresents which findings were based on credibility determinations. Such determinations require an assessment of a “witness’s demeanor” or another “quality that a review of the transcript would not reveal.” United States v Thorn, 446 F.3d 378, 384 (2d Cir. 2006). Otherwise, the “substance of testimony,” even if labeled as “incredible” by the trial judge, is “reviewed meaningfully by examining the transcripts.” Id. Moreover, a reviewing court may “find clear error even in a finding purportedly based on a credibility determination” where “[d]ocuments or objective evidence” contradict the finding or the finding itself is “internally inconsistent or implausible on its face.” Anderson v. City of Bessemer, 470 U.S. 564, 575 (1985). Where, as here, the court is the “accuser, fact finder and sentencing judge all in one,” review is “more exacting than under the ordinary” deferential standard. Wolters Kluwer Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Scivantage, 564 F.3d 110, 113-14 (2d Cir. 2009) (cleaned up).

ARGUMENT

I. The Magistrate Judge’s Finding that K&K “Willfully Breached” the Protective Orders, in Light of the Full Record, Cannot be Sustained as a Matter of Law

As an initial matter, Saudi Arabia misleadingly frames its response, claiming that the court made many “credibility determinations.” Opp’n 27-28 & n.11; id. at 28 (“[Her] findings were supported by her observation of the witnesses.”). The only such determination involved John Fawcett’s testimony about his July 22 phone calls, Ord. 19, 39, and is erroneous, infra Part I.B.4.

A. Direct Evidence Confirms the Truth of Fawcett’s Confession

Saudi Arabia does not and cannot dispute that all direct evidence—including multiple declarations by Fawcett and K&K attorneys, hours of testimony, firm documents, contemporaneous emails, phone logs, and personal text messages—support the truth of Fawcett’s September 27 written confession: he acted alone, destroyed evidence of his misconduct, and leaked the transcript because the public “must be forewarned in order to have some chance to protect themselves” from Musaed al Jarrah. See Obj. 21-26; KSAX-108A (full written confession).

Saudi Arabia strategically avoids discussion of Fawcett’s written confession, Opp’n 27-36, which the court found “he had drafted himself” and “wrote . . . in his own words,” Ord. 26. The document undermines the court’s reasons for finding that he acted in concert, rather than alone:

- The court found Fawcett’s “motive” for leaking the transcript—apparently to “protect the children of Morocco”—was “fabricated.” Ord. 28. But Fawcett wrote in his confession that he decided to leak the transcript because “the public at least must be forewarned in order to have some chance to protect themselves” from Jarrah and that he “could not allow Musaed al Jarrah’s criminal acts to remain a secret.” KSAX-108A; Obj. 25.
- The court “doubt[ed]” the “genuineness” of Fawcett’s motive because he “did not alert anyone in the U.S. or Moroccan governments about his concerns.” Ord. 28. But Fawcett wrote that “the Saudi [and U.S. governments] continue to protect Musaed al Jarrah rather than prosecute him” and so “[t]he only venue for such warning is the media.” KSAX-108A; Obj. 23, 25 n.10, 26.
- The court declined to find that Fawcett acted alone because he learned about Jarrah’s conduct “about six to eight months” before the deposition “on an unconfirmed basis.” Ord. 28. But Fawcett wrote that confirmation at the deposition that Jarrah was “a child pornographer” was a “revelation[]” to him. KSAX-108A; Obj. 25-26; accord Tr. 469:11 (Fawcett: “It [had been] a rumor.”).
- The court also found (remarkably) that, Fawcett’s adoption of two children from Morocco following his human rights work, undermined the truth of his confession because “[h]is ‘children’ referenced in his declaration were at least 21 by the time of the leak.” Ord. 28.²
- The court found, as to Fawcett’s September 27 declaration, that “there was no evidence at the hearing or in Fawcett’s phone records that he participated in th[e] additions” regarding his knowledge of Morocco’s history of child sex trafficking. Ord. 27 (emphasis added). But that overlooks: (a) phone records showing multiple calls between Fawcett and Benett or Pounian on September 27, KSAX-136 at 2-3; (b) Fawcett’s testimony that “we talked about [the additions] on the phone. . . . long phone calls,” Tr. 466:22-467:2; and (c) Fawcett’s testimony that “I signed what I believed to be a correct declaration I felt that was my declaration,” Tr. 467:12-19; see also Obj. 26 n.11.

This evidence—overlooked by the court—demonstrates Fawcett’s actual motive and disproves the court’s bedrock finding that additional details in his September 27 declaration were “fabricated.”³

B. No Circumstantial Evidence Supports the Finding that K&K Willfully Breached the Protective Order

Saudi Arabia uses the same diversionary tactics to avoid addressing the record evidence undermining the “circumstantial evidence” proposed by Saudi Arabia and wrongly adopted by the Magistrate Judge. Compare Opp’n 27-36, with Obj. 26-35.

1. K&K’s “Litigation Strategy”

Saudi Arabia does not dispute that it makes no sense for a U.S. law firm to think it could “force” any sovereign nation—let alone Saudi Arabia—into a settlement through press attention, when the U.S. government cannot move Saudi Arabia through press attention. Obj. 27. Nor does Saudi Arabia dispute that it makes even less sense for the firm to leak a document unrelated to the merits and (as the Magistrate Judge concluded) not “important” to the litigation. Obj. 27 (quoting Ord. 49). The court’s finding that K&K’s “motive for the leak”—a quixotic “litigation strategy,” laden with risk, that seeks to “force” Saudi Arabia into a settlement with such attention, see Obj. 27-28 (quoting Ord. 37)—should be rejected as “implausible on its face.” Anderson, 470 U.S. at 575. And the evidence cited by Saudi Arabia is threadbare. See Opp’n 31 n.13, 28. Kreindler’s testimony—that he has made public statements for plaintiffs “to put pressure on the defendant” and the “form of a resolution may or may not be what we traditionally think of as a settlement,” see Obj. 27 (quoting Tr. 24:3-25:5)—is unremarkable and true of almost any major case. And Kreindler’s past criticism of the Protective Orders as overbroad supports the opposite inference: that, as an officer of the court, he has taken the orders seriously despite his chagrin. Obj. 28.

2. K&K’s Post-Leak Investigation

As demonstrated in the objections, the Magistrate Judge’s finding that other K&K attorneys were “willfully blind”—because K&K’s investigation was supposedly “lackadaisical,” “paltry,” “facially deficient,” and “almost designed to avoid implicating Fawcett,” Ord. 2, 39, 41, 44, 45—should also be rejected. Obj. 28-30. The court did not address objective evidence—including contemporaneous emails amongst the investigative team—that demonstrates K&K’s attorneys took the investigation seriously from the start and were lied to and deceived by Fawcett. Obj. 29.⁴ Rather than compare K&K’s investigation to the nearly identical investigations by other PEC members and other plaintiffs and defense firms, Obj. 28, the court (despite evidence of the substantial steps Fawcett took to hide his misconduct) unfairly criticized K&K based on steps it could have taken to potentially catch Fawcett after the leak occurred—steps that no other firm took. Obj. 29; see also, e.g., ECF Nos. 6981-4 (Kellogg Hansen), 6991 (Cozen O’Connor), 6992 (Motley Rice); accord Tr. 293:23-295:3 (Maloney).

Saudi Arabia repeats the court’s erroneous finding that K&K “never ‘directly question[ed]’ Fawcett about his role in the breach.”” Opp’n 30, 34; see also Ord. 13 (“Fawcett does not recall being questioned by anyone.”). Fawcett testified, however, that K&K attorneys asked him “in substance” whether he “disclosed the transcript to Michael Isikoff.” Obj. 30 (quoting Tr. 436:12-23).⁵ Realizing that the Magistrate Judge failed to engage with this evidence, Saudi Arabia attempts to lace the court’s order with its own “credibility determination” where none occurred. See Opp’n 34 (“As finder of fact watching Fawcett answer those questions, Judge Netburn could see him attempting to equivocate and ultimately failing.” (citing nothing)).⁶ It also claims that the court “reasonably interpreted his entire testimony as meaning that he was never directly asked,” Opp’n 34, but (tellingly) fails to identify where the court weighed such evidence. The court ultimately misread Fawcett’s testimony, see Ord. 40 (citing Tr. 436:12-23), likely prompted by Saudi Arabia’s misleading post-hearing submission, see, e.g., ECF No. 7389 ¶¶ 84-86.⁷

Saudi Arabia does not dispute that the court improperly evaluated K&K’s investigation through hindsight, rather than in comparison to the investigations conducted by other firms. Its attempt to argue that K&K “could have” revealed Fawcett’s misconduct sooner had it impounded his personal devices is unpersuasive. Opp’n 34-35. First, it would have been unreasonable under the circumstances for K&K to attempt to collect the personal devices of its attorneys and staff for examination; indeed, no other law firm took such a step, see, e.g., ECF Nos. 6981-4, 6991, 6992; accord Tr. 293:23-295:3, and such an action would raise serious legal and privacy issues, see In re Asia Glob. Crossing, Ltd., 322 B.R. 247, 257 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2005). Even had K&K made such an extraordinary attempt, Fawcett previously destroyed evidence and there is no guarantee that he would not have similarly deleted the two (obscure) Signal messages with Isikoff. KSAX-82 at 1, 3 (messages). Second, the contacts themselves did not evidence wrongdoing: phone calls among the K&K employees were commonplace (not “suspicious”); Fawcett and Kreindler spoke regularly about the case, see KSAX-134, -135, -136; accord Tr. 59:19-23; Kreindler undisputedly communicated with Isikoff and his team in the lead up to his podcast appearance, Tr. 59:18-24, ECF 7147-6 at 6; and Liz Crotty was a long-time friend of Fawcett and former K&K employee, Tr. 447:5-16. This Court should reject the finding of “willful blindness” by K&K attorneys. See Thompson v. Jam. Hosp. Med. Ctr., 2015 WL 7430806, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 20, 2015) (no “willfulness” where breach “due to factors beyond the party’s control” (cleaned up)).

⁷ Fawcett testified that he did not recall being asked the exact words “did you disclose this transcript,” Tr. 439:1-12, but made clear that he was asked “in substance” if he leaked the transcript, Tr. 436:12-17; that he “misled” K&K, Tr. 436:23, that he “prevaricated and dissembled” and “avoided letting [K&K attorneys] know” what he had done, Tr. 486:24-25; accord Tr. 407:8-9 (Pounian: “I asked Mr. Fawcett if he knew anything about how Mr. Isikoff got the transcript.” (emphasis added)).

3. K&K’s Responses to Magistrate Judge’s Orders

As demonstrated in the objections, the court likewise erred when it found that K&K attempted to “frustrate,” “foil,” and “obstruct” the court’s investigation. Obj. 30-32; see Ord. 2, 41, 42, 45, 50, 57, 59, 65. K&K submitted its declarations by the required deadlines and in compliance with the terms of the court’s orders. Obj. 30-31; see ECF Nos. 7011, 7147 (declarations). It was not reasonable to compare K&K’s timely compliance with the early compliance or volunteered information provided by only some of the other law firms that received the transcript. Obj. 31 & n.14. As the lead firm prosecuting the case against Saudi Arabia, K&K had unique work product and security concerns, including to protect the identity and safety of an investigator in Turkey who received the transcript, and Saudi Arabia’s discovery demands after the leak were vastly overbroad. Obj. 31 (citing KK-52 (email); ECF No. 6981 (motion)).

Saudi Arabia dismisses K&K’s unique concerns as “self-serving assertions,” Opp’n 35, and claims that, if K&K “truly thought Fawcett was innocent,” it “would have had every reason” to dispel “suspicion” by obtaining a declaration from Fawcett “sooner,” id. at 30. But (once again) Saudi Arabia ignores contemporaneous documentary evidence to the contrary. See, e.g., KK-52 at 1 (Pounian to Benett (July 29 email): “I’m also concerned about sharing [REDACTED]’s name with [Saudi Arabia] since he is living abroad.”).⁸ Although Saudi Arabia claims that the court’s “meticulous catalogue” of the record deserves “deferential review,” Opp’n 35, failure to account for such conflicting documentary evidence constitutes clear error. See Anderson, 470 U.S. at 575.

Saudi Arabia also repeats the court’s findings regarding purported “misrepresentations” in the declarations. Opp’n 33. But since Fawcett acted alone and K&K attorneys did not learn of his breach until his September 27 confession, it was true that “no firm attorneys knew who was responsible for the breach until September 27.” Opp’n 33. To the extent that, with hindsight, any K&K attorney described the firm’s document retention system or the details of their investigation imprecisely, Opp’n 33, Saudi Arabia cites no evidence that the inaccuracies were intentional. In any event, the alleged “misrepresentations” do not show that the firm knew about Fawcett’s leak.⁹ Because inferences drawn from K&K’s declarations do not reasonably support the finding that it was “willfully blind” to Fawcett’s leak, the Court should reject these findings.

4. The Timing of Phone Calls

The timing of phone calls does not “evidence” a conspiracy to leak the transcript. Obj. 32-35. Saudi Arabia does not dispute that Kreindler spoke with Isikoff and his staff before his July 1 podcast appearance, which was unrelated to the breach. Obj. 32 (citing ECF No. 7147-6 at 6); accord Tr. 59:18-24. Instead, Saudi Arabia repeatedly misleads regarding the two, one-minute

⁸ Given the recent murder of Jamal Khashoggi, who had been interviewed by a K&K representative and killed in Turkey, K&K was worried about protecting the identity of its investigator who was in Turkey. See Obj. 14, 21 (citing KK-52; Tr. 372:4-10 (Benett)).

calls between Fawcett and Kreindler on June 28. See Obj. 32-33; KSAX-134 at 1-2 (stamped 12:22 p.m. and 12:23 p.m.). First, it selectively quotes Kreindler’s testimony, suggesting that Kreindler was “very familiar with the terms” of the FBI Protective Order, Opp’n 31 (quoting Tr. 18:17), when moments earlier he testified that he “did not recall the 30-day window” for the FBI to propose redactions because he last “read [that protective order] when [he] signed it” in 2018. Tr. 18:25.¹⁰ Saudi Arabia then misrepresents the record, claiming that the Magistrate Judge made a credibility determination about the June 28 calls after having “witnessed Fawcett on the stand,” Opp’n 29 (quoting Ord. 39), when that credibility determination (the only such determination on the record) addressed Fawcett’s explanation of his July 22 calls. See Ord. 19 (finding), 39 (conclusion). The court’s “suspicion” surrounding these short phone calls—which were consistent with the regular and well-documented communications between Fawcett and Kreindler, and with Kreindler’s testimony regarding a quick question, Obj. 32-33—does not constitute a permissible “inference” of a conspiracy. United States v. Pauling, 924 F.3d 649, 656 (2d Cir. 2019).¹¹

The Court should also reject the Magistrate Judge’s finding that the July 22 phone call, the morning after Saudi Arabia informed the PECs that it intended to move for discovery into the leak, was only between Fawcett and Kreindler, and that they probably discussed the leak. Obj. 33-35. A Verizon phone bill shows that Pounian was also on that 46-minute conference call, which (at 9:17 a.m.) naturally involved discussion of Saudi Arabia’s email (at 9:14 p.m.) the night before. Obj. 33-35; see also ECF No. 7359-1 (phone bill and Pounian declaration).

¹¹ Saudi Arabia regurgitates the court’s findings of “extreme reciprocal loyalty” between Fawcett and Kreindler. Opp’n 28-29 (citing Ord. 9, 43). The court only cited testimony that Kreindler viewed Fawcett as “honest and trustworthy,” that Fawcett had worked at K&K for about 20 years, and that he had (in the words of Saudi Arabia’s counsel) “a certain amount of loyalty” to his colleague. Ord. 9 (citing Tr. at 128:11-129:16, 417:15-18), 43 (citing Tr. 416:3-5). There is no evidence to support the inference that Fawcett’s “certain amount of loyalty” (whatever that means) rose to the level of committing criminal misconduct for the firm.

Saudi Arabia defends the court's decision to ignore Pounian's declaration because it was an out-of-court statement. Opp'n 32 n.14 (citing Ord. 17 n.8). But Saudi Arabia does not dispute that, because of the extraordinary procedures imposed by the court before and during the hearing (e.g., barring K&K attorneys and Fawcett from discussing the leak in the month before the hearing, no exchange of exhibits, direct testimony limited to the declarations, and sequestration of K&K attorneys during the hearing), it was impossible for K&K to offer testimony from Pounian about the July 22 call. Obj. 12-13, 34 n.15. Saudi Arabia also repeats the court's reasoning that Pounian's declaration "undercut" Kreindler's testimony because he declared the call involved, among other topics, discussion of a response to Saudi Arabia's July 21 email regarding discovery, while Kreindler testified that the call "was not about the leak." Opp'n 32 n.14 (citing Ord. 17 n.8). That is rhetorical hairsplitting and inaccurate. Kreindler testified that he did not "recall what this phone call was about," but that "[m]aybe" it was about "the fact that the Court might order an investigation." Tr. 84:13-16; accord Tr. 446:9-20 (Fawcett: "[It] might have been a conference call with others."). Kreindler (and Pounian) otherwise categorically and repeatedly denied—in sworn declarations and testimony—communication or knowledge that Fawcett was the source of the leak, before his September 27 confession. Fawcett also wrote and testified that prior to that confession he never told anyone at K&K that he was the source of the leak. KSAX-108A.¹²

Saudi Arabia doubles down on the Magistrate Judge's refusal to credit Fawcett's testimony that he did not discuss the leak with Kreindler on the July 22 call, based in part on Fawcett's demeanor on the stand. Opp'n 29 (citing Ord. 39). But because that determination was also "supported" by the court's numerous "findings" that overlooked conflicting documentary evidence, and given the trial-by-surprise procedures surrounding the hearing, this Court should afford no deference to the Magistrate Judge’s limited credibility determination—and otherwise unsubstantiated inference—that Fawcett and Kreindler had a private conversation on July 22 about Fawcett being the source of the leak. The Court “may not credit inferences within the realm of possibility when those inferences are unreasonable.” Pauling, 924 F.3d at 657 (quotes omitted).

On the full record, there is neither clear-and-convincing nor a preponderance of evidence, supporting the Magistrate Judge’s findings. The order should be set aside as clearly erroneous. See Doe v. Menefee, 391 F.3d 147, 164 (2d Cir. 2004) (collecting cases where the lower court erroneously failed to “account[t] for conflicting evidence or the gaps in a party’s evidentiary presentation” or made “factual inferences that the evidence did not permit”).

II. The Magistrate Judge’s Order Is “Contrary to Law” Because Rule 37(b) Did Not Authorize Sanctions Against K&K

As demonstrated in K&K’s objections, the Magistrate Judge exceeded her authority by sanctioning the K&K firm, because Rule 37(b) “requires ‘party’ misconduct as the foundation for any sanctions, including sanctions against an attorney” and “there is no allegation of such misconduct” here. Obj. 16 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. 37(b)(2)(A)). That conclusion is confirmed by the plain meaning of the term “party”; the text of Rule 37(b) and surrounding provisions; the text of Rule 11(c); and, binding caselaw, including the Second Circuit’s decision in Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co. of New York, 855 F.2d 1009 (2d Cir. 1988), which held that a “party” under an earlier version of Rule 37 does not include the party’s law firm. Obj. 16-19.

Saudi Arabia avoids addressing K&K’s textual analysis of a Rule 37 “party” and Apex Oil Co.’s holding. Attempting to confuse the issue, Saudi Arabia (1) dedicates one paragraph to its interpretation of a Rule 37 “party,” Opp’n 21-22, and then (2) misrepresents K&K’s argument and attacks a strawman—namely, the scope of “just orders” sanctions after “party” misconduct has been found. Opp’n 23-27.¹³

Relying heavily on SEC v. McNulty, 137 F.3d 732 (2d Cir. 1998), Saudi Arabia argues that attorney conduct is “imputed to their client” under Rule 37(b). Opp’n 22. McNulty, however, engaged in the fact-intensive inquiry of whether a court should “impute” an attorney’s conduct to the client for purposes of a Rule 60 or Rule 55 default judgment, not Rule 37. See 137 F.3d at 738-40. That inquiry turns on whether the client makes an evidentiary “showing” that he “attempt[ed] to monitor counsel’s handling of the lawsuit.” Id. at 740. The Circuit did not address—nor did it need to address—the application of Apex Oil Co.’s holding (as a matter of textual interpretation) that a Rule 37 “party” does not include the party’s lawyer.¹⁴

Saudi Arabia’s argument that “party,” under Rule 37(b), really means “attorney, law firm, or party” fails on its own terms. Saudi Arabia’s “interpretation would render superfluous another part of” Rule 37. See Homaidan v. Sallie Mae, Inc., 3 F.4th 595, 602 (2d Cir. 2021) (quotation marks omitted). Under Rule 37(b)(2)(C), there would be no need to expressly authorize a monetary sanction against “the disobedient party, the attorney advising that party, or both” for failure to obey a discovery order. Similar language in other provisions of Rule 37 would also be redundant. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(A), (d)(3). What is more, under Saudi Arabia’s theory, the term “party” would have different meanings in the first clause of Rule 37(b)(2)(A). An attorney representing their client during discovery would not have an “officer, director, or managing agent,” or even a “[Rule 30(b)(6)] witness” to designate on behalf of himself, separate from the client. Cf. Env’t Def. v. Duke Energy Corp., 549 U.S. 561, 574 (2007) (identical words presumed to bear the same meaning throughout a text). By contrast, the plain meaning of the term “party”—i.e., the “one by or against whom a lawsuit is brought,” U.S. ex rel. Eisenstein v. City of New York, 556 U.S. 928, 933-34 (2009) (cleaned up)—gives effect to every clause and word of Rule 37’s text.

Most significantly, Saudi Arabia’s theory contravenes the Second Circuit’s holding in Apex Oil Co. There, the Circuit held that an earlier provision of Rule 37(c)—which authorized sanctions after “a party fail[ed] to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter”—did “not permit sanctions against a party’s attorney” because “[b]y its express terms, Rule 37(c) applies only to a party,” not the party’s law firm. 855 F.2d at 1011, 1013-14 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(c) (1987)). Former Rule 37(c)’s requirement of “party” misconduct before imposing sanctions is identical to current Rule 37(b)(2)(A)’s requirement. See, e.g., Kleiman v. Chertoff, 2007 WL 9706519, at *9 (E.D.N.Y. July 10, 2007) (applying Apex Oil Co. in holding that “Rule 37 cannot provide the basis for the imposition of sanctions on [plaintiff’s counsel]”). Rather than explain how its theory can survive Apex Oil Co.’s holding—or similar analyses of Rule 37 by sister circuits—Saudi Arabia simply ignores their holdings. See Obj. 18-19.¹⁵

Saudi Arabia also cites the same three cases erroneously relied upon by the Magistrate Judge. See Opp’n 22 n.7, 24 & n.8. In Fonar Corp. v. Magnetic Resonance Plus, Inc., 128 F.3d 99, 100-03 (2d Cir. 1997), the misconduct of the party’s Rule 30(b)(6) witness (the company’s president) served as the foundation for sanctions, including a $500 fine against the party’s individual attorney for “his role in [the Rule 30(b)(6) witness]’s failure to appear for deposition.”

Fonar had no reason to address the implications of Apex Oil Co.'s holding or analyze the meaning of a Rule 37 "party." In Smith & Fuller, P.A. v. Cooper Tire & Rubber Co., 685 F.3d 486, 488-90 (5th Cir. 2012), the Fifth Circuit addressed whether a protective order under Rule 26(c) qualifies as "an order to provide or permit discovery" under Rule 37(b)(2)(A). And in Markus v. Rozhkov, 615 B.R. 679, 701-04, 708 (S.D.N.Y. 2020), the district court vacated Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(vii) sanctions against an individual attorney because his client was not a "party" to the action. See also Obj. 19.¹⁶

Finally, the record refutes Saudi Arabia's assertion that K&K forfeited its challenge to the applicability of Rule 37(b). Opp'n 20-21. As detailed in K&K's objections, see Obj. 9-14, the Magistrate Judge failed to notify K&K of the specific "authority under which sanctions [we]re being considered." Ted Lapidus, S.A. v. Vann, 112 F.3d 91, 97 (2d Cir. 1997).¹⁷ The Magistrate Judge's October 4 order scheduling a hearing did not reference any authority under which the court was considering sanctions but listed potential remedies available only under the court's inherent authority. ECF No. 7167 at 1. The court later stated it "intend[ed] to issue findings of fact and recommend remedies to District Judge Daniels," ECF No. 7277 at 1, and described the upcoming proceeding as a "contempt hearing," ECF No. 7310 at 3; cf. 28 U.S.C. § 636(e)(6)(B) (titled "Certification of Other Contempts to the District Court"). After the hearing, the court required concurrent briefing, ECF Nos. 7386, 7389, did not allow reply briefing, and denied K&K's request for oral argument on the issues, ECF Nos. 7317, 8544 at 64. K&K argued in its submission that contempt and inherent authority sanctions were not warranted against the firm, ECF No. 7386 at 35-55, and objected to the general sufficiency of notice in its post-hearing briefing, id. at 56 (“The Court permitted [a hearing] without notice of what rule or authority was invoked.”). The court subsequently held that K&K “may file Rule 72(a) objections to this Opinion and Order, which will cure any possible notice issues.” ECF No. 8544 at 35. Saudi Arabia (at 20-21) cites no case supporting its suggestion that its own July 2021 letter requesting discovery—pursuant to inherent powers, Rule 37, or even the MDL Protective Order itself, ECF No. 6981—provided sufficient notice of the authority under which the court was considering sanctions at the November 2021 hearing, over three months later. Cf. Schoenberg, 971 F.2d at 929 (insufficient notice by court, where opposing party informed counsel of intent to move for contempt sanction). Such failure to notify K&K about the specific “standard by which [its] conduct will be assessed”—namely, clear-and-convincing evidence under contempt or inherent authority, or a preponderance of evidence under Rule 37—unquestionably affected K&K “opportunity to defend [it]self against th[e] charge.” Ted Lapidus, 112 F.3d at 97.

¹⁶ The two district cases within this Circuit cited by Saudi Arabia (at 22 n.6) neither address Apex Oil Co. nor involve a law firm. See Shipstad v. One Way or Another Prods., LLC, 2017 WL 2462657, at *3, *5 (S.D.N.Y. June 6, 2017); Copeland v. Rosen, 194 F.R.D. 127, 133 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). And the remaining out-of-circuit cases—on which Saudi Arabia relies for its distraction about the scope of "just orders" sanctions—similarly fail to address the meaning of a "party" under Rule 37. See Opp'n 24-25.

Saudi Arabia does not dispute that there is insufficient evidence to meet its higher evidentiary burden. See Obj. 16, 20-21 (detailing standard); Opp’n 20-27. Rule 37(b) should not be a vehicle for opposing counsel to avoid that burden in an attempt to sideline its opponent.

CONCLUSION¹⁸

For each and all of the forgoing reasons and as set forth in the objections, the Magistrate Judge’s order should be set aside as contrary to law and clearly erroneous.

¹⁸ The Magistrate Judge’s harsh sanctions were also not commensurate with Fawcett’s leak. See Obj. 35-40. Saudi Arabia (at 37-40) does not dispute that the court found that the transcript was not “important” to the litigation, fails to identify any harm to itself other than “embarrassing” information, and boldly argues that 9/11 death and injury plaintiffs will not be harmed by the removal of their counsel in the case against Saudi Arabia. But see Obj. 36-37; ECF No. 8772 at 2-5 & n.1-7 (K&K reply in support of stay). Because the Magistrate Judge’s sanctions were based on erroneous findings, the sanctions are also out of step with other cases involving leaked transcripts. See Obj. 38.
